Introduction

A cornucopia of cartographic delights for the edification of the Referee.

The beautiful and informative double-page maps in this book provide an indispensable aid to the Referee running games in Dolmenwood. Ever wondered about the topography of the Wood and the locations of its highlands and lowlands? Or about the distribution of fungi and herbs throughout the Wood? Or how far it is from one settlement to the next when travelling by road? The maps in this book answer all these questions and many more.

Part One

Maps of Dolmenwood

“Where I’m from there are no maps. At least none that everyone agrees on. The lands of Fairy float on the winds of dream and imagination, where nothing is forever fixed. To mortals, this is a curious, beguiling, and confounding concept. For the folk of Fairy, the fixity and certainty of the mortal world are similar. It’s intriguing and wondrous that exquisitely detailed maps of Dolmenwood can be drafted, shared, hoarded, and stolen. But there’s a sense of unreality. Surely upon awakening one day, we shall find that Castle Brackenwold is situated in the ruined Table Downs, and that things have always been this way?”

—Shadow-of-Sorrow’s-Lament, elf wanderer

Part Two

Settlement Maps

“I’ve been wandering Dolmenwood for nigh on four decades now, bedding down in ditches and lonesome dells, and in every town, hamlet, and wayside inn besides. Always a treat to have a mattress under yer back and a blanket on yer belly. And while I love the wild woods above all else, there’s something to be said for being among folk from time to time, sipping a drink by the fire. The ale’s not bad in Dreg, though a tad weak. Prigwort’s the place to go for a nice woody spirit. But nothing beats a mug of Moon’s Milk and a nice pouch of Buggler-Boot at the Sombre Lamb. Orbswallow, that’s home to an old wayfarer.”
